

The fact that El Sembrador and DADCAMP have a strategic alliance is fundamental for the transformation of lives. In the two years that we have had this strategic alliance, we can see that there has been a tremendous influence on the young people that are educated in El Sembrador, and also on the parents of those young people who are educated here. And to be able to take DADCAMP to other parts of Honduras is a big opportunity for everyone. We know that this relationship that has started between El Sembrador and DADCAMP is going to allow us do things not only in Honduras, but also throughout all of Latin American through World Gospel Mission. Together, we will be able to do new things. Together we can reach new young people, new fathers, understanding that the role of a father is fundamental for a child to have security. We continue to think that this alliance will take us very far, that El Sembrador could be the headquarters for DADCAMP in Honduras, and that we are going to do great things.
